

Jump Right In!

Making the right connections to support your full-time job search will take some time and effort.

It's important to be proactive and re-connect with friends, relatives, classmates and work colleagues to let them know your plans and career goals. They can be the beginning of a strong network which will support your career in both the short and long term.

LinkedIn is a great tool to help you reconnect. We encourage you to schedule informational interviews or take a colleague out for lunch to start building your professional network. All of these things will give you the insight and support you need to navigate a successful job search.

Just a reminder, if you haven't completed the Career Management Foundations Course, there is still time. Make this a priority so that your documents are ready for when you begin classes in June. The last day to get feedback on your documents is June 2.
