

CORNELL UNIVERSITY

Student Organization Funding Tracks

An equitable funding program for student organizations that promotes collaboration, education, and responsible spending.

Track 1: Beebe Lake ($250-1000)

All new groups start here and this is where the foundation for a student organization begins. Additionally, returning organizations may choose to stay in this track based on what is best for them. Enjoy the stroll!

Track 2: Libe Slope ($1000-2000)

This is where the slope starts to climb, and with more funding comes more responsibility. This track is the most popular as it is home to most student organizations. It combines just the right level of resources, workshops, and funding to help student organizations be successful in achieving their mission.

Track 3: McGraw Clock Tower ($2500-4000)

The clock tower is an iconic symbol of Cornell, with its bells ringing throughout campus. This track has up to a $4000 spending cap and is designed for organizations hosting mid-sized campus programs. With a higher level of funding, each group needs to have a solid foundation and a strategic officer development program.

Track 4: Willard Straight Hall ($3500-8000)

The student union was built in 1925 and is the nucleus for student engagement and community. As the student body grew, student clubs started taking a more significant role in defining what it meant to be involved outside the classroom. This track has the highest requirements and fosters intentional involvement to unlock a spending cap of $8000. Willard Straight believed in the power of collaboration and community.

To be considered for a funding track or movement for the following academic year, your organization must meet the requirements during the current academic year. The track requirements must be maintained and completed yearly for evaluation by the primary funding boards and Campus Activities.

Organizations can only move up one track level yearly. The size of the student organization, financial necessity, and completion of the specific requirements of a funding track all play a role in evaluating a student organization's financial needs.

The ultimate decision of assigning a particular track belongs to the primary funding umbrellas and is not guaranteed by the successful completion of track requirements. However, to ensure the organization is not bumped down a track level, it is critical to maintain what is expected within that track.
